1. Introduction

In January 2009 Kilmartin House Museum conducted a Desk Based Survey (DBA) on the church and graveyard of Kilmartin. The aim of the report was to locate and compile all known information on the church with particular reference to the 'old' graveyard. The collated information will be used as a basis for the survey and recording of the gravestones within the graveyard. The project was undertaken in partnership with the Dunadd Historic Graveyard Group, Historic Scotland, the Church of Scotland and Argyll and Bute District Council. The project is part of the Dalraida Project which is the major funder.

This report contains printed copies of all information collected during the course of the project.

2. Desk Based Survey Methodology

2.1 Previous Work

The historic graveyard of Kilmartin has aroused the interest of some of the earliest Scottish antiquarians, some of whom made descriptions and drawings following their observations (Graham 1860, Drummond 1877). A survey of many of the medieval grave slabs and some post reformation graves stones was undertaken by the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland, and their work was included in their Inventory for Argyll (RCHAMS 1992). Many of the stones have also appeared within publications on the early Christian monuments (Fisher) and later medieval graves (Bannerman and Steel). Local historians did some exhaustive work on recording the names and places on the grave stones in the cemetery, and particular mention must go to Alan Begg who recorded inscriptions between 1988 and 1991. The relevant work within these various publications has been incorporated into the text, as has the transcribed survey undertaken by Alan Begg. Several works on the graveyard have periodically appeared within the 'Kist' the the journal of the Natural History and Antiquarian Society of Mid Argyll, and contains articles dating back to 1971. All volumes of this were searched for information on Kilmartin church and graveyard.

2.2 Other Sources Searched

The National Monuments Record of Scotland based in Edinburgh and maintained by the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland, holds plans, photographs and drawings relating to the graveyard and a list of the relevant archive is reproduced below. This archive was visited and examined and where possible items were cross referenced. This is important as most of the previous surveys have assigned the individual graves a different identification number. The end result is that one individual gravestone or grave slab can have a series of different identification numbers, and not all interested bodies are aware of each others numbers, or indeed, that they exist. Part of the work of this project has been to record any previous numbers assigned to the graves. The importance of being able to determine all numbers is clear in terms of data management and in terms of future site management and research.

This research work is by no means exhaustive and other sources and documents will have to be searched, but it is intended this work will be a sound basis for future research. Of particular relevance to future researchers will be church records with particular reference to the Old Parochial Registers of Scotland. The General Register Office for Scotland holds the following for Kilmartin: Births 1747-1819, Marriages 1746-1819 (ref: 521/1), Births 1820-1854 and Marriages 1820-1854 (ref: 521/2).

3.1 Church History

The church occupies a spur projecting from the gravel terrace on the E side of Kilmartin Glen, overlooking several of the Bronze Age burial-cairns in the valley, and 300m SSW of Kilmartin Castle. The former manse, built in 1789 and subsequently much altered and now Kilmartin House Museum, stands immediately to the NW, with the glebe in the valley to the W. No evidence of the early church can be seen, but the presence of three early Christian grave markers in the churchyard (Nos 1-3 below), suggest an ecclesiastical structure before the 9th century AD. The free standing cross (No. 4 below), probably dating to the 10th century AD, is another indication of the presence of an early structure.

The church serves a parish extending some 20km from Loch Crinan along the E shore of Loch Craignish to the head of Gleann Domhain, and whose N part is bounded for 7km by the NW shore of Loch Awe. This area seems to correspond with the barony of Ardskeodnish, held from the late 13th century by the Campbells of Lochawe, and an agreement referring to the advowson of the church was made between two members of the family in 1323, while the patronage remained in their hands in the post-Reformation period. The names of individual parsons and vicars are recorded from 1361 and 1304 respectively, and some of them were members of the Campbell family. The parsonage was also a prebend of the cathedral church of Argyll from 1443 or earlier. In the almost total absence of inscriptions on monuments of the Loch Awe school, the social context of the remarkable collection of grave slabs is uncertain, but it was recorded that Sir Collin Campbell of Glenorchy was 'honorable bureit in the Kirk of Kilmertyne' in 1480. The chapel of Kilmahumaig with its attached lands was included in the parish until 1651, and the teinds of the chapel of 'Kilbryde at Lochgersyde' were held by the minister in 1617, while a detached block of land lying E of Loch Gair and Loch Glashan, adjoining Kilbride, appears also to have been part of Kilmartin parish until 1651. A chaplainry at the Lady altar in the parish church itself was endowed with lands and these, together with the church's own property, were secularised in the late 16th century, forming the nucleus of the later Kilmartin estate.

In 1793 it was stated that: 'The church was built in the year 1601. The walls are strong, but the plan is incommodious. It is a long narrow stripe, and has had no reparation or improvement since it was built, except giving it a new roof. The pulpit ... is an old Gothic structure of stones and lime, about 7 feet (2.1m) from the level of the floor, and is coeval with the church'. No more is known of this building, which was probably an alteration of the medieval church rather than a completely new one, but it dated from the period when Mr Neil Campbell, minister of Kilmartin, was also bishop of Argyll (infra). However, surviving documents indicate the pressure for space in the churchyard, where many medieval monuments remained in use. In 1677 Neil Campbell, sometime of Kilmartin, sold to his namesake, now of Duntrune, 'the two lairs belonging to me and my prediccursors quich lyes at the uper end of the ould kirk ... with ane lech s: one chist (low stone (tomb-) chest)'.

In 1731 there was a court-case between Donald MacCallum (Malcolm) of Poltalloch and Alexander MacIsaac, miller at Slockavullin, over the ownership of 'through-stanes' (recumbent grave-slabs), and in 1767 Alexander Malcolm sued the same MacIsaac, who was ordered to remove inscriptions added by him to several medieval grave-slabs. Similar inscribed family names of 18th- and early 19th-century date are common on many of the slabs described below.

An estimate of £331 for rebuilding the church was submitted in 1798 by Dugald Mclsaac, a local builder, and George Malcolm, brother of the principal heritor, undertook to supervise it, but the work was still incomplete in March 1801. However, Neil Malcolm was invited to give instructions for the erecting of a family pew shortly thereafter. Several plans for a new building were submitted in 1833, and that selected was by J G Davis, to contain 550 sittings at an estimated cost of £900. Neil Malcolm of Poltalloch offered to pay for the tower, estimated to cost a further £200, on condition that he had exclusive use of the seats in the tower, but the final cost of the building, which was opened in 1835, exceeded £1300. The alteration of the interior, first proposed in 1896, was begun three years later to plans by James Edgar, 'architect', clerk of works on the Poltalloch estate, and completed in 1900 at a cost of £758.' The charge was united with that of Kilmichael Glassary in 1982 (RCHAMS 1992)

JOHN CAMPBELL

'In 1414 Sir John Campbell, the brother of Sir Duncan Campbell Lord of Lochow, was rector of the Church of St Martin' (Argyle Charters)

GILBERT M'KINCAIRDAY

'In 1498, Gilbert M' Kincairdy was vicar of Kilmartin. In 1508, John Campbell was rector. Gilbert Duncanson in 1510.

1541

NEIL CAMPBELL

In 1541, the vicar of Kilmartin was Master Neil Campbell, who is styled Dean of Lochow. In 1547 and 1550 he was rector of Kilmartin.

1546

GILBERT MAKECHALLUM

In 1546 master Gilbert Makechallum (or Malcolmson apparently rector at Craignish) officiated as Chaplian in the parish of St Martin in Ardscofnish.

1553

JOHN CARSWELL, M.A.; 1553 to 1565 he was the rector of Kilmartin, formerly treasurer to the diocese. He became Bishop of the Isles.

1572

DONALD CARSWELL, M.A.; mentioned as rector in 1572, when he resigned that office to the patron, Archibald, Earl of Argyll; he was vicar on 14th Nov. 1581; he resigned and was summoned as parson to underlie the law for art and part in the slaughter of John Gray, servitor to the deceased John Carswell, Bishop of the Isles, 18th June 1583. The rectory passed into the hands of Archibald earl of Argyle, the patron.

NEIL CAMPBELL, son of Alexander C. McPherson of the Carnassarie family, was parson here and chantor of the Diocese of Argyll in 1574 ; was a member of Assembly in 1591, and appointed one of the assessors of the Moderator; became Bishop of Argyll in 1606, but resigned that office in 1608 in favour of his son. He continued in this charge, and was a member of Assembly 8th June 1610. In 1617 he let on lease to Archibald Campbell of Kilmorie the teinds of three-fourths of the parsonage and vicarage of Kilbride, at Lochgairside. He died in 1627. He married Christian Carswell, probably daughter of John, Bishop of the Isles, and had issue- John, Bishop of Argyll; Neil, Bishop of the Isles; Alexander, served heir to his father in the lands of Aucheynd in 1627; Donald, his successor in the parish; a daughter (married Donald M Callum of Poltalloch).

‘Mr William MacLachlan, rector of Kilmartin, desires that his mortal remains, and those of his wife Grisel MacGilchrist and their children, should lie in this resting- place as spoils of Death, 1686’.

A dressed lintel bearing the initials ‘W M ML’ and the date ‘1686’ lies in the grounds of the former manse now Kilmartin House Museum. This was possibly originally from the nearby gateway into the adjoining graveyard as the gateway has dressed surrounds below the rough stonework of the present lintel.

1690

JU(JALI) CAMPBELL, brother of Neil C. of Ardlarach; educated at University of Glasgow; called in 1689; ordained 9th Jan. 1690; a member of Assembly in 1690 and 1693; died Aug. 1721. Fragments of notes in Latin made by him when a student of natural philosophy were extant in 1818.

1724

DUNCAN CAMPBELL, brother of Campbell of Llaschoilly, and of Neil C., minister of Colonsay and Jura; licensed by Presbytery of Edinburgh 10th Aug. 1709; ordained to Kilchrenan and Dalavich 18th April 1710; called 22nd July 1723; transferred and admitted 16th June 1724; died 28th Sept. 1736. During his ministry at Kilchrenan he had no proper residence and suffered much from "calculous affections". He married Nov. 1712, Henrietta (died 20th Dec. 1762), eldest daughter of Dugald Campbell, minister of Lismore, and had issue three children, who all died in infancy. His widow married (2) James Buchanan of Glenoe. He left 1000 merks to the poor of the parish, and it is recorded of him that he took charge of the education of the nephews of his late brother, the laird of Llaschoilly, as well as the education of the children of his brother Neil.

ARCHIBALD LAMBIE, educated at University of Glasgow (where his name appears as a student of the third class in 1725); declined a call to Torosay 18th April 1733; spent some time abroad; presigned by John, Duke of Argyll and Greenwich, April 1737; ordained 12th July 1738; was Clerk of Presbytery; died 18th June 1767. On 6th April 1763 he intimated his demission of the office of Clerk, "on account of a series of ill-usages, as he could not hold it without pain, being exposed to insults and opprobrious language at every meeting. He arranged with care and revised and engrossed all the minutes of the Presbytery "that had been scattered in loose papers for twenty years." He married (1) 18th July 1714, Isobel (died 5th Feb. 1752), daughter of Archibald Campbell of Ormaig, and had issue Archibald, born 20th Nov. 1745, died young; Betty, born 16th Dec. 1746, died 26th April 1751; William, born 15th Aug., and died 22nd Aug. 1748 : Florence, born 4th Sept. 1749, died young : (2) 20th Aug. 1752, Catherine M Lachlan, who died 20th June 1754: (3) 26th Feb. 1755, Marion (died 11th March 1792), daughter of Hugh Campbell of Cruachan, and had issue Alexander, born 23rd Oct. 1756; Neil (twin), born 23rd Oct. 1756; William, born 28th Dec. 1758, a student at Glasgow University in 1771, died in Jamaica, 29th July 1794; Jean, born 14th Oct. 1760; Mary, born 20th May 1762.

Married. 6th June 1916, Edith Agnes, daughter of Alexander Ross and Isabella Ross, and had issue Hector Alexander, born 30th Jan. 1917; Alastair Ross, born 27th July 1918.

3.2 Church Description

The present church, which stands in the N part of the churchyard and probably occupies the position of the earlier ones, was built in 1834-5 to the designs of Joseph Gordon Davis (the London architect who had been employed at Kilmory Castle (No. 169) and elsewhere in the area. Its immediate predecessor was a modest structure built as recently as 1798, which appears on the 1825 estate-map as a square with small extensions, probably porches or stairs against the E and W walls. The only surviving relic of this building is a schist slab lying in the churchyard, inscribed in small letters 'Kilmartin Ch(urch) Built', with the large date '1798' surrounded by incised scrolls.

The church is an aisled rectangle, 19m from E to W by 12m over all, with a projecting W tower measuring 5.8m by 7m, and is built of coursed rubble with dressings of schist ashlar and yellow sandstone. The openings throughout have four-centred arches with moulded hoods and diamond-leaded window-panes; the four windows in each aisle are single lights, while those of the clerestory are of two lights with quatrefoils in the spandrels. The main roof has overhanging eaves but the aisles have low crenellated parapets and stepped eaves, and the E gable is marked by a sandstone moulding with face-masks at the base and a bracket at the apex, supporting the tall crocketed finial of a stepped parapet. The centre bay of the E front contains a tall three-light Perpendicular window, divided by buttresses from the aisles, which have two-leaf doors and small blind lancets above them. The tower has angle-buttresses in the lower half, and windows like those of the clerestory at first-floor and bell-chamber levels, with ground-floor doors to W and N. In the S wall there is a large blank panel with scrolled surround, and a moulded course with foliations and angle-masks marks the base of the crenellated parapet.

In the interior the aisles are marked by four-bay arcades with wide arches carried on thin rectangular columns without bases or capitals. The angles are double-chamfered, and the springings of a third chamfered order in the arch-heads are marked by face-masks copied from medieval models. The arcades originally contained galleries, removed in 1900, which resembled the remaining W gallery, filling the tall plain tower-arch. This belonged to the family of Malcolm of Poltalloch and its timber front, carried on thin metal columns, has a quatrefoil base-course, narrow panels with cusped triangular heads, and a foliated cornice. The original pulpit, of three-decker design, was set under the E window, and a long communion-table occupied the central passage between the pews, but all of these fittings have been replaced. A dais for the communion-table and pulpit has been formed at the E end, enclosed on N and S by timber porches occupying the E bays of the aisles, and the existing timber panelled ceiling also dates from the restoration of 1900. A stone stair gives access to the gallery in the tower, but the upper stages are not accessible. A bell made for the parish minister in 1712 is preserved near Duntrune Castle car park. The bell bears the following legend:

MRO. DUGALLO CAMPBELL: A.S. 1712: PARAECONE CELLAE MARTINI: PAROCHAIE ARDSKIDNISH: R.M. FECIT EDIN. (the R.M. standing for the foundry of Robert Maxwell in Edinburgh). In 1837 it was stated that there was no bell, however in 1839 the old bell was sold for £3.0s.9d with the new bell costing £27.17s.6d. The bell-chamber presumably contains the bell purchased in 1839.

3.3. Graveyard Description

This report will only concern itself with the 'Old' graveyard surrounding the parish church at the S, W and E. The 'New' graveyard occupies two landscaped terraces lower down the slope to the S. Other more recent burials are also to be found on the N and NW side of the church. The churchyard, which contains one of the largest collections of medieval grave slabs in the West Highlands, is roughly rectangular, as shown on an estate map of 1825, and was extended down the slope to the S in 1883-7. The old churchyard occupies an irregular rectangle measuring between 43m and 52m EW and between 47m and 70m NS. A lime mortared rubble wall surrounds the church yard on the N, E and W sides while a revetted terrace of the new graveyard delineates the S side. There are two entrances into the graveyard, the main gate at the W which is now surmounted by a stepped granite arched war memorial which was erected over the entrance in 1921. The second entrance, at the NW of the churchyard, connects the churchyard to the former manse, now Kilmartin House Museum. The gate surround on the N side is constructed from chamfred ashlar blocks that don't sit well with the present rubble construction that surmounts the gate. It is possible that the dressed lintel bearing the initials 'W M ML' and the date '1686' that now lies in the grounds of the former manse once surmounted the gate (likely William MacLachlan, rector of Kilmartin, see above)

Close to the SW angle of the church, a small stone mausoleum to Bishop Neil Campbell, perhaps in part C 16, but now with a glazed roof, it serves as a lapidarium. Lying in the yard, and placed within the top of a revetment wall at the E of the church is a decorated panel with incised scrolling that records the building of the 1798 church. But it is the wealth of burial stones, one of the largest collections in the West Highlands, which must command attention. Three Early Christian slabs (Nos. 1-3 below) show Latin cross outlines while a fourth, late C9 or C10, takes the same form as a freestanding cross (now in the church) carved on both sides with plaiting, knotting and diagonal key patterns. — More than eighty tapered slabs and cross fragments, dating from C13 to C16, predominantly the work of Loch Awe school sculptors, are to be found in the churchyard or lapidarium. The 'Loch Awe school' is one style of West Highland carving distinguished by the use of a limited repertoire of patterns, many of them bearing a characteristic miniature warrior. One stone has been identified as belonging to the Iona school (No. 83 below) while others fall outside the characteristic West Highland styles (No. 71 and 79 below). Numerous slabs and table-tombs, C17 and C18, exhibit a variety of heraldic devices. Two stones, dated 1707 and 1711, are carved with an unexpectedly primitive naivety, such as that of William MacLachlan, 'rector of Kilmartin', his wife, Grisel, and his children. Endearingly unsophisticated: a rubble mural panel framed by rude pilasters and raised at the top to include an armorial shield mantled by a garland of fruit. Several monuments relate to the family of James Gow d.1855, who was largely responsible for supervising agricultural improvements on the Poltalloch estate from c. 1796. To Gow's son James 1837, an obelisk with raised disc carved with blasted tree and broken column, the work of Glasgow sculptor Mossman. Distinct differences in height across parts of the graveyard suggest some form of terracing or possible internal divisions within the burial ground.

3.3.1 Mausoleum Description

A small stone-built enclosure 7m S of the SW angle of the church was roofed by the Ministry of Works in 1956 for use as a lapidarium (infra). It measures 5.3m by 3.5m within 0.75m walls, the side-walls being crenellated with projecting coping-slabs, and each containing a slit-window, while the end-walls were originally flat, but with a raised pediment above the W doorway and a flat-topped projection containing the E window, which preserves a glazing-groove. When it was converted to a lapidarium the inner parts of the side-walls were heightened and gables were formed to carry a glass roof, but it may originally have been open. The door and windows have round-arched schist dressings which may be of 17th-century date, but the wall-head was probably rebuilt in the late 18th or 19th century. Above the W door there is a schist panel with a relief inscription within a roughly-sunk frame, incomplete at the right and probably originally a grave slab:

1627 HEIR LYIS MR / NEIL CAMEL AND CRISTIANE C[?ARSUEL...]

Neil Campbell, minister of Kilmartin from 1574 to 1627 and bishop of Argyll from 1580 to 1608, married Christian, daughter of Bishop John Carswell (see No. 115), and two of their sons became respectively bishops of Argyll and of the Isles, while a third succeeded his father as minister of Kilmartin. His descendants held the Kilmartin estate until about 1674 (see No. 134) and thereafter that of Auchinellan, and in 1844 it was noted that they retained 'the ancient Caibeal or burial-place of the rectors in the churchyard', and were 'sometimes called by the natives Sloch an Easbuig' ('descendants of the bishop').

3.3.2 Funerary Monuments and other Carved Stones

The churchyard contains numerous gravestones and horizontal grave slabs and many of the earlier ones were described by the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland in their Inventory for Argyll (RCHAMS 1992 No. 68 pp. 127-143). In view of the exceptional numbers of monuments in the church, the churchyard, the Poltalloch enclosure and the lapidarium, the location of each one is indicated individually. The stones in the lapidarium are numbered clockwise from the doorway. The stones are carved mainly from local epidiorite.

3.3.2.1 Early Christian

(1) Churchyard. Roughly rectangular slab set upright, 1.2m in visible height by 0.52m, damaged at top and much worn. On each face there is a large outline Latin cross, that on one face has slightly rounded armpits and on the other, square ones.

(2) Churchyard. Roughly rectangular slab, 1.57m by 0.48m, damaged at the top and left edge. In the upper half there is the incised outline of a Latin cross with sunk rounded armpits. In the lower half is the added inscription KILMERTIN.

(3) Churchyard. Roughly rectangular slab, 1.15m by 0.41m, much worn and broken obliquely at the foot. It bears the incomplete outline of a Latin cross with square armpits, only traces of the right side being visible.

(4) Church; in churchyard until 1977, recumbent when seen by Graham about 1860 (Graham 1860), but set upright near entrance-gateway before 1880. Drummond reported that the cross had been brought from a roadside site "1/4 mile from the church" where he was told the socket remained (Drummond 1881, Campbell and Sandeman 1964). Free-standing cross of local epidiorite set in modern concrete base, 1.55m in visible height, including a damaged finial; the shaft tapers in width from 0.39m to 0.37m below the cross-head, but it increases in thickness from 100mm at the foot to 150mm at the cross-head and 120mm at the top. One side-arm is 0.39m in height and projects about 60mm, the other being broken off, and the original span was about 0.5m. One face (a) is enclosed by a broad edge-moulding which forms a cross within the plain cruciform outline, and returns at the armpits to surround rings, varying in diameter from 50mm to 65mm, with small central hollows. At the foot of the shaft there is an equal-armed cross with edge-moulding and sunken circular armpits, set between four crosslets of the same form. Above this there are single panels of diagonal key-pattern and broad double-beaded interlace. The cross-head is filled with irregular interlocking spirals, surrounding an interlaced boss of slight projection within a 160mm-diameter moulding, and the upper arm contains an interlaced knot with parallel plaited strands. On face b the margins of the slab have been cut away to a width of 80mm and depth of 40mm outlining a cross with bevelled sides. It has an edge-moulding enclosing sunken hollows 40mm in diameter in the armpits of the side-arms, which are set in the lower part of the cruciform outline. The shaft is filled with diagonal key-pattern; the cross-head with an incised saltire separating pointed peltae with spiral terminals, at the sides, and concentric ovals above and below; and the top arm contains a horizontal key-pattern. The fragmentary finial measured 120mm in length and 40mm in thickness, and was almost flush with face a, whereas it was not closely aligned with the raised cross on face b. This discrepancy, and the inferior execution of face b, have been interpreted as showing that the latter face was a later addition, but there is unlikely to be any great difference of time between the carving of the two faces. The design on the cross has some parallels such as the thick interlocked spirals which resemble those from a slab at Ardchattan Priory (RCHAMS 1975 No.217, 1). The vertical fret-pattern is similar to those on the 'marrigold stone' at Carndonagh (Co. Donegal) while the interlaced design in the top arm resembles that found at a cross at Carndonagh and on Muiredach's Cross, Monasterboice (Co. Lough). The short arms of the Kilmartin cross resemble those of the Kiells Cross, but the small hollow bosses are enclosed in tight armpits on a fashion similar to a cross removed from the isle of Vallay (North Uist) to St Margret's Church in Lochgilphead in the 19th Century (RCHAMS 1988 No. 96).

The cross probably dates from the 9th or more probably the 10th century.

3.3.2.2 Medieval Grave slabs

(5) Lapidarium 1. Tapered slab of chlorite-schist with bevelled edges, 1.89m by 0.45m. In a sunk panel at the top there is a false-relief cross composed of four penannular rings round a central quatrefoil, and with intermediate trefoil terminals. The long shaft and stepped base are incised, as is a sword with lobated pommel, short curved quillons and a central fuller, to the right. At the left there is an undulating triple-beaded plant-stem in low relief, with a ?horseshoe at the foot. There are traces of an added and subsequently effaced inscription on the cross-shaft.

13th-14th century.

(6) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.75m by 0.51m, lacking the bottom right corner. Within a plain margin, doubled at the top and right edge, there is an incised cross-shaft with angled base, and a four-ring cross-head having concentric double rings with sunken centres, and pointed terminals in the spandrels. The upper right ring is somewhat smaller, and there is a twist of foliage in the outer spandrel. The incised letters BAR have been added left of the shaft.

14th century.

(7) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.74m by 0.45m, damaged and much worn. Within an edge-moulding, a broad flat margin encloses at the left a panel with continuous intertwined plant-stems, and at the right there are traces of the sword-hilt shown by Drummond Iona school, 14th century.

(8) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.51 m by 0.36m. Much worn and resembles number 7.

Iona school 14th century.

(9) Churchyard. Tapered slab of slate, 1.71m by 0.46m, badly shattered at the top. Within a triple margin whose inner member bears incised cable-ornament, there is a continuous series of plant-stems as on number 7. The top has been defaced to receive the name [IO] RN DEOR, and an adjacent slab bears the same name and the date 1777.

Iona school, 14th century.

(10) Lapidarium 5. Tapered slab of chlorite-schist, 1.91m by 0.48m, much worn; bordered by nailhead between two flat mouldings. At the top is a label whose original inscription was replaced by DUNTROON / I[AIN] C[AIMEUL] ('John Campbell), followed by the 0.29m figure of a man armed with bascinet and aketon, holding a spear in his right hand, and the left hand on the hilt of a sword. He stands, with feet turned to his right, in a gabled and foliated niche. The greater part of the slab is occupied by a network of intertwined plant-stems with upward-pointing paired leaves, below two opposed animals, one of them winged.

Loch Awe school, 14th century.

(11) Poltalloch enclosure. Tapered slab, 1.85m by 0.57m, with triple margin as on number 10, but having continuous angular twist-pattern on the inner moulding, and three large chevrons on a bevel at the top; part of the top moulding has been cut away for the 19th-century inscription POLTALLOCH. A 0.41m armed figure stands in a niche crowned by dragon's-head finials with large ears of palmette form, having a disc between them. The right pillar of the niche is voluted and the other is a twist which merges into the tail and limbs of one of two opposed animals above a somewhat irregular network of plant-stems with downward-pointing leaves.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(12) Lapidarium 8. Tapered slab, damaged at top left corner, 1.85m by 0.52m, with triple margin as on number 10, partially effaced at the right by the name DUNTROON. A 0.44m figure, armed as in number 10 but with a shield on his right arm, stands in a niche with voluted pillars and dragon finials; the edges of the upper parts are grooved. The lower part of the slab resembles that of number 11, but one of the opposed animals has a duck-like bill.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(13) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.88m by 0.49m, damaged at the foot and much worn. It bears a 0.35m armed figure in a dragon-headed niche with voluted and foliated pillars, and the lower half appears to have resembled that of number 11.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(14) Lapidarium 6. Tapered slab with slightly pointed head, 1.76m by 0.53m, with triple margin as on number 10. A 0.45m armed figure, of conventional type but with feet turned to the right, stands in a dragon-headed niche with plant-stem pillars. In the lower half there are an opposed griffon and a dragon, and then two long-eared cat-like beasts whose hind-legs are linked to plant-stems surrounding a stag and two hounds.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(15) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.88m by 0.63m, with triple margin as on number 10, and an additional row of nailhead on the bevelled edges. A 0.75m armed figure with shield stands in a dragon-headed niche with triquetra knots at the springing of the gable. In the lower half two opposed 'cats' surmount a network of plain stems.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(16) Lapidarium 9. Tapered slab, 1.89m by 0.59m, much worn. Within a triple margin as on number 10 a 0.56m armed figure stands in a dragon-headed niche with voluted and outward-canted pillars. The lower half is filled by a network of plain stems as on number 15. Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(17) Lapidarium 7. Tapered slab, reconstructed from three pieces and lacking the top, 1.66m by 0.57m; much worn. Within a triple margin as on number 10 there is a 0.52m armed figure with shield in an incomplete niche with voluted left pillar. A horizontal twist divides it from two opposed animals, one of them winged, above a network of plant-stems as on number 11.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(18) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 2.01m by 0.61m, much worn. It is divided by a horizontal twist springing from a flat outer moulding and there are chevrons forming lugs at the angles of the slab. The upper panel has a T-fret border, with large leaves above, which encloses a dragon-headed niche with voluted pillars. The lower panel contains a network of plant-stems as on number 11, incorporating animals.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(19) Churchyard. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.97m by 0.59m, damaged at the top and much worn. Within a plain moulding there is a 0.42m armed figure in a niche, above an irregular network of plant-stems incorporating at least one animal.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(20) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.93m by 0.72m, lacking the top edge and lower left corner, and much worn. Within a flat margin there are two panels, each enclosed by a frame of twist ornament and divided by a band of indecipherable ornament. In the top panel there is a 0.46m armed figure in a niche surrounded by plant-stems. The larger lower panel is occupied by plant-stems.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(21) Lapidarium 4. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.95m by 0.55m, framed by a roll-moulding between rows of nailhead on the bevel and surface. The nailhead returns horizontally to form three panels, each with its own flat margin, the upper one containing a 0.43m armed figure in a niche with plain bars intersecting in a double-triangle canopy. Each of the two lower panels contains a pair of opposed animals whose tails and hind-legs develop into intertwined plant-stems; both of the upper animals are winged, and one of the lower ones is a unicorn. Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(22) Lapidarium 3. Tapered slab, 1.88m by 0.55m, much worn. Within an outer flat moulding, doubled at the top, and an inner twist-moulding, there is a foliated lancet niche with the 0.41m figure of a priest or layman standing in an attitude of prayer. The large lower panel bears opposed animals above an irregular network of plant-stems.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(23) Lost. Tapered slab with triple margin as on number 10. At the top there were two opposed animals linked to a network of plant-stems with paired downward-pointing leaves, and in the lower half there was a central sword as on number 25, flanked by strips of three-cord plait, with shears and a small casket at the foot.

Loch Awe school, 14th-11th century.

(24) Lapidarium 19. Tapered slab, 1.75m by 0.51m, much orn and flaked in places. It bears a central sword as on number 25 within intertwined stems which spring from the limbs of two opposed animals at the top and have leaves only at the flat outer margin. Part of this ornament was obliterated in the early 19th century by the name IAIN CAIMBEUL, while the sword-blade bears the somewhat earlier inscription DUNTROON: MARCH.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(25) Lapidarium 17. Tapered slab with bevelled top, 1.64m by 0.47m, broken across and repaired. Within a triple margin as on number 10 it bears a central sword with lobated pommel and inclined quillons with slightly expanded terminals. The blade is flanked by angular plant-stems with voluted leaves, and in the upper part there are stems linked to two back-to-back animals, with a horizontal twist and triquetra at the top. The blade is inscribed A. Mc.L.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(26) Paltalloch enclosure. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.83m by 0.44m. It resembles number 25, but with linked plant-stems above the animals, paired stems with palmette leaves flanking the sword-blade and plain interlaced stems below it. An inscription has been obliterated from the blade, and the name POLTALLOCH incised in a panel cut across the top. Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(27) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.81 m by 0.61m, split longitudinally. Within a triple margin as on number 10 it bears a sword as on number 25, with the quillons entangled in the surrounding plant-stems, and shears and a casket at the foot.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(28) Lapidarium 16. Tapered slab, 1.73m by 0.51m, with triple margin as on number 10. At the top there are confronted animals, one a unicorn, linked to plant-stems which incorporate detached pellets, interlaced knots and demi-palmette leaves, surrounding a central sword as on number 25.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(29) Churchyard. Lower part of tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.11m by 0.44m. Within a plain margin there is a sword with inclined quillons surrounded by plant-stems with large demi-palmette leaves, and a casket at the foot.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(30) Paltalloch enclosure. Tapered slab, 1.82m by 0.49m, much worn, reconstructed from three fragments and lacking the top left corner. Within a flat moulding and inner tressure, there is a sword with short slightly-curved quillons. The hilt is flanked by two animals whose tails produce undulating plant-stems, and at the foot there are a casket, shears, and an elongated ?comb. The blade and top of the slab have been inscribed as on number 26, and the upper POLTALLOCH has almost obliterated foliage at the top of the slab.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(31) Lapidarium 15. Tapered slab, 1.77m by 0.52m, with flat margin. It bears a large central sword as on number 25, with a scabbard-chape, surrounded by intertwined pairs of plant-stems with downward-pointing leaves. The stems are attached to two stylised dragons' heads at the foot, and two interlinked triquetra knots at the top.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(32) Churchyard. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, about 1.9m by 0.6m, broken across and lacking the top left corner. Within an edge-moulding flanked by nailhead on the bevel and top, there is in the lower half a sword as on number 25, surrounded by a network of plant-stems enclosing leaves on curved stalks, and with a ?casket at the foot.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(33) Lapidarium 18. Tapered slab, 1.93m by 0.49m, broken across and repaired. The bevelled top edge bears continuous large chevron-ornament and the surface has a flat moulding enclosing nailhead, which in part of the left edge is left incomplete as a narrow roll. This inner moulding returns as a horizontal twist forming two unequal panels, the larger top one bearing, within a flat margin, a sword as on number 25 between undulating plant-stems incorporating triquetra knots at the top and a dragon's head at the bottom of the left stem. The lower panel is filled by a network of plain stems.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(34) Churchyard. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.91m by 0.47m. Within a triple margin as on number 10, with additional nailhead on the bevel, there is a sword as on number 25, surrounded by plant-stems resembling those on number 33. Below the cross-guard there is a horizontal twist which overlies the sword-blade and is linked to the angle- moulding, and this is repeated towards the foot of the blade, forming three equal panels.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(35) Lapidarium 2. Tapered slab, 1.76m by 0.41m, much worn, with plain margin and continuous chevron-ornament on bevelled top edge. A central sword is surrounded by plant- stems resembling those on number 33, but with paired dragons' heads at the foot, and linked at the top to an interlaced cross of arcs with pellets in the interspaces.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(36) Lapidarium 12. Rectangular slab, 2.03m by 0.59m, restored from several fragments, lacking two corners, and much worn. A triple margin as on number 10 is filled by intertwined plant-scrolls incorporating a short sword below dragons' heads at the top, and two animals, one a unicorn, at the foot.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(37) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.66m by 0.46m, lacking the top left corner and much worn. Within a triple margin as on number 10 there are traces of a sword with lobated pommel and inclined quillons, and foliage-ornament. Probably

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(38) Churchyard. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.98m by 0.58m, much worn and flaked in parts. Within a triple margin as on number 10, with an additional narrow moulding on the bevel, there are traces of a sword-hilt and plant-stems.

Probably Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(39) Churchyard. Upper part of tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.21m by 0.46m, much worn. A central sword with lobated pommel and inclined quillons is flanked by intertwined plant-stems. Probably Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(40) Churchyard, Tapered slab of slate, very badly flaked, 1.83m by 0.56m. It has had a margin of continuous chevron- ornament on a slight bevel, and the only surviving ornament on the surface is the tip of a sword-blade with intertwined plant-stems below it.

Probably Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(41) Lost. Tapered slab, probably of slate, flaked in lower part. It bore three chevrons on the bevelled top edge, and a triple margin as on number 10, whose inner moulding merged at the top with a label bearing an inscription. Below this there was an opposed pair of long-eared animals with foliated tails, above a network of intertwined stems with no foliate elements. The three-line Lombardic inscription, whose final words were carved on the inner moulding at the right, is clearly shown in Mackenzie's photograph:

+SVB ISTO LAPIDE / JACET PATRICIVS / MAC GILLACRIST / MEC ELAIR

'Under this stone lies Patrick, son of Gilchrist MacKellar'.

The most prominent local family of MacKellar's was that of Ardary in Glassary parish, among whom 'Patrick' was a favoured name while 'Gilchrist' is recorded in 1470 and 1496, but a Patrick MacKellar, of unknown family, witnessed a charter at Carnassarie in 1436.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(42) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.81m by 0.48m, much worn. Within a triple margin as on number 10 there is a network of intertwined plain stems as on number 41, with a plain rectangle, perhaps a casket, at the foot.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(43) Lapidarium 11. Upper part of tapered slab with gabled top marked at the base by rounded lugs, 1.48m by 0.49m in width below the lugs; much worn. Within a flat margin, defaced at the right by the inscription JOHN LAMONT, there is an irregular network of stems with downward-pointing paired leaves, and loosely intertwined stems in the gable.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(44) Churchyard, erected on 19th-century tomb-chestmarking burials of the MacTavish family of Dunardry, partly concealed by adjacent cross. Tapered slab with flat margin enclosing nailhead which returns to form three panels with inner margins, as on number 21. The surface-decoration, much worn, appears to have been composed entirely of intertwined plant-stems.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(45) Churchyard. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.91m by 0.58m, much worn and bearing the added date 1777. It bears an edge-moulding between nailhead on the bevel and top and is divided into three panels as on number 21. The two lower panels bear intertwined plant-stems, but the ornament of the top one is obliterated.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(46) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.91m by 0.55m, much worn. It bears a central sword as on number 25, surrounded by intertwined plant-stems with opposed animals at the top.

14th-early 16th century.

(47) Churchyard. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.84m by 0.56m, broken across and much flaked. Within a flat margin there is a sword as on number 25, surrounded by intertwined plant-stems.

14th-early 16th century.

(48) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.84m by 0.53m, much worn and cut back at the top for the initials D McD. The ornament resembles that on number 47.

14th-early 16th century.

(49) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.88m by 0.56m, much worn. Within a double margin there is a central sword as on number 25, flanked at the right by encircled plant-stems and at the left by a ?mirror and ?casket.

14th-early 16th century.

(50) Churchyard. Fragment of slab, 0.47m by 0.33m, bearing angular intertwined plant-stems between a flat margin and a ?sword-blade.

14th-early 16th century.

(51) Churchyard. Tapered slab with hollow-chamfered bevel, 1.92m by 0.52m; much worn. At the right there is a sword as on number 25, and on the left a series of foliage- medallions and rosettes. The sword-blade bears the inscription AR[CHIBALD] GILLIS.

14th-early 16th century.

(52) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.91m by 0.52m, much worn. Within a flat edge-moulding it resembles number 51. The upper part is defaced by the inscriptions DUNTROON and IAIN CAIMBEUL.

14th-early 16th century.

(53) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.82m by 0.48m, much worn. It resembles number 52 but has larger medallions.

14th-early 16th century.

(54) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.83m by 0.56m, much worn. It bears a central sword with traces of plant-stems overlying the inclined quillons.

14th-early 16th century.

(55) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.97m by 0.55m, much worn. The only visible ornament is a central sword, perhaps originally surrounded by plant-stems.

14th-early 16th century.

(56) Churchyard. Rectangular slab, 1.54m by 0.41m, much worn. Within a cable-moulding enclosing a flat margin there is an incised central sword with lobated pommel and inclined quillons. A pair of shears is carved at the foot in false relief.

14th-early 16th century.

(57) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.54m by 0.42m, re-used in 1777 to mark the burial-place of Malcolm Blair. The only surviving medieval ornament is the tip of a central sword-blade and a pair of shears at the foot.

14th-early 16th century.

(58) Churchyard. Upper part of tapered slab, 1.03m by 0.51m, bearing an incised sword with lobated pommel and short curved quillons, and a comb at the lower right.

14th- early 16th century.

(59) Churchyard. Tapered slab with pointed foot and slightly pointed top, 1.91m by 0.53m, much worn. Within an edge-roll and inner moulding bearing nailhead which returns horizontally across the head and foot of the slab, the only visible ornament is a sword with inclined quillons. The name JOHN BLEW was added in 1777.

14th-early 16th century.

(60) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.84m by 0.61m, much worn and bearing a central sword with inclined quillons.

14th-early 16th century.

(61) Churchyard. Miniature tapered slab with bevelled edges, 0.65m by 0.28m, much worn. A raised edge-moulding encloses a panel with traces of a sword at the right.

14th-early 16th century.

(62) Lapidarium 13. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, lacking the foot, 1.39m by 0.53m. Within an incised margin there is an incised sword as on number 25, but with a langet and a central fuller having an inverted-thistle-shaped terminal.

Local, 14th-15th century.

(63) Lapidarium 14. Tapered slab, 1.67m by 0.51m. Within an irregular margin there is an incised sword having a lobated or diamond pommel with tang-button and short curved quillons. Local, 14th-15th century.

(64) Churchyard. Roughly tapered slab, 1.68m by 0.63m, much worn. At the left there is an incised sword with lobated pommel and curved quillons, and at the centre the blade of a second sword whose hilt has been higher than the other but is completely effaced.

Local, 14th-15th century.

(65) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.71m by 0.56m, much worn. It bears the pecked outline of a sword with lobated pommel and inclined quillons.

Local, 14th-15th century.

(66) Churchyard. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.73m by 0.47m, worn and flaked at the foot. It bears an incised sword with lobated pommel and curved quillons, and the inverted, and probably secondary, outlines of an axe and hammer.

Local, 14th-15th century.

(67) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.72m by 0.55m, much worn. The only ornament is a sword with round pommel and inclined quillons, and the added inscription POLTALLOCH MARCH.

Local, 14th-16th century.

(68) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.83m by 0.56m, much worn. It bears an incised sword with round pommel, probably with a tang-button, and inclined quillons.

Local, 14th-16th century.

(69) Churchyard. Upper part of tapered slab of slate, 1.36m by 0.55m, badly flaked. Within a border of dogtooth there is a claymore with incomplete quillons, the hilt flanked by animals as on slabs at Kilmichael Glassary (No.69,25 and 27) and the blade by plant-stems.

Early 16th century.

(70) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.77m by 0.51m. The only ornament is a central claymore with round pommel and tang-button, and straight quillons.

Local, 16th century.

(71) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.66m by 0.56m, much worn. There are traces of a double margin and a central claymore, and at the foot, in false relief, an equal-armed ringed cross with square arm-pits, whose axis is not exactly aligned with the sword-blade. This may be the slab shown by Drummond, but the detail at the foot appears to be different and Drummond's slab is probably a lost one.

Local, 16th century.

(72) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.71m by 0.46m. Within a plain margin there are incised a claymore at the left and shears at the bottom right, with the name BL [AIR] added at the top. Local, 16th century.

(73) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.64m by 0.42m, much worn. Within a bold semicircular moulding set in 20mm from the bevelled edge, it bears the blade of a central sword. Local, probably 16th century.

(74) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.62m by 0.57m. It bears the recut outline of a sword with inclined quillons and a round pommel which may not produce the original medieval form, with the name 'A McA(RTHUR)' added.

(75) Churchyard. Miniature tapered slab, 1.1m by 0.37m, much worn. Within a crude incised margin there are two panels containing intertwined plant-stems, the upper one having a flat inner margin and the other having opposed beasts above the plant-stems. Local, 14th-early 16th century.

(76) Lapidarium 20. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.44m by about 0.47m, lacking the top right corner. The surface, enclosed by a cable-moulding and flat inner moulding, is uncarved except for a comb and shears at the foot. Local, 14th-early 16th century.

(77) Churchyard. Tapered slab, 1.42m by 0.43m, split diagonally at bottom left. It bears an edge-toll within square nailhead set on the bevelled edges, but the only identifiable ornament is a pair of shears set vertically in the lower half. At the top the incised name JOHN / BRODIE may commemorate the gardener of that name who was employed at Duntrune from about 1798. Local, 14th-early 16th century.

(78) Lost, recorded in churchyard in 1962. Rectangular slab, 1.15m by 0.31m. Within a margin with inward-pointing sawtooth ornament there is a ring-headed cross with squarehollowed armpits and concave hollowed terminals at the sidearms, and having a long incised shaft with simple rectangular base. Local, probably 15th-16th century.

(79) Churchyard. Rectangular slab, about 1.7m by 0.5m, much worn and damaged at the edges. Within a double moulding there is, towards the right, a large sword or claymore with round pommel and tang-button, and almost straight quillons, flanked on the right by a plant-scroll. To the left of the sword-hilt there is a two-legged ?human figure, and below the hilt there is a cross with incised shaft and rectangular base, and a ringed cross-head with sunk square armpits and short side-arms, in false relief. At the foot there is a casket with binding-strips, and a ?mirror and ?comb. The later inscriptions PETER CAMPBELL and DUNTROON are cut across the slab. Local, probably 15th-16th century.

(80) Poltalloch enclosure. Slab of quartzose schist, probably tapered but damaged along the ?left edge, 1.84m by 0.37m; much worn. The surviving edges bear three-cord plait, T-fret and voluted ornament, but the ends appear to be truncated. The surface is divided into three panels crudely carved in false relief, the ?top one showing two human figures, one with arms raised and both with short block-like bodies; there may have been a third figure at the left. The large central panel contains a cross with wedge-shaped arms, and two animals, with three irregular interlaced space-fillers, and the bottom panel is filled with interlace. The name POLTALLOCH is incised on a recessed panel at the foot. This slab is a crude local product, probably of late medieval or post-Reformation date.

3.3.2.3 Effigies

(81) Lapidarium 10. Slab of chlorite-schist, 1.94m by 0.58m at the head and 0.63m in the lower half, much worn. It bears in relief the full-length effigy of a man wearing bascinet, aventail and aketon. His left hand grasps the blade of a large sword suspended from a waist-belt whose free end is held in his right hand. The feet rest on a plain ledge, and there is no surviving evidence of carving on the base-slab. A thin scroll and the name McTAVISH have been incised across the aventail.

Probably Iona school, 14th-15th century.

This is possibly the stone believed to be of Iver Crom 'the conqueror of Cowal' who was supposedly buried next to his brother Tamhais Corr, the progenitor of the MacTavishes of Dunardry. The grave slab also became the centre of a dispute between the MacIvers and the MacTavishes when 'one of that family (a MacTavish) was interred under the tombstone not of his progenitor but of Iver or, as some say, Iver's stone, a larger and finer one than that of Tavish was placed over him by the MacTavishes. Resistance was offered by some MacIvers present, and the stone was somewhat injured in the struggle. But the stronger party on the spot prevailed, and, to secure their triumph, inscribed in modern capitals and the name MacTavish over the breast of the knightly figure on the tombstone of Iver'.

(82) Poltalloch enclosure. Tapered slab, 1.84m by 0.58m, with chamfered edges- It is carved in relief with a strip of continuous chevron-ornament at the foot, on which there stands a full-length figure in bascinet, aventail and quilted aketon with skirt split at the front. The right hand holds a long spear with diamond-shaped head, and the left hand grasps the hilt of a sword with round pommel and tang- button, and short slightly-curved quillons with slightly expanded terminals, whose tip extends onto the chamfered edge of the slab. The name POLTALLOCH is carved at the top of the plain base-slab.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(83) Poltalloch enclosure. Tapered slab, 1.85m by 0.59m, with chamfered edges. It bears an armed figure somewhat smaller than that on number 82, and at the foot, in low relief within a margin, there is a large ring-knot having in the interspaces triquetra knots which form an equal-armed cross. At the top there are the added names POLTALLOCH and CA(?MPBELL).

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

3.3.2.4 Tomb-chests

(84) Churchyard. Tomb-chest, possibly reconstructed and lacking the N side-slab (see number 85). The S side-slab is 2.08m long by 80mm thick, and has a decorated zone 0.43m high above an earth-fast base. It bears three paired stalks which form asymmetrical arches enclosing large rounded leaves, with trefoils in the upper spandrels. The F end-slab, 0.6m long by 80mm thick, of which only the upper 0.3m is exposed, bears an incised ringed cross with sunken square armpits, which in its present form appears to be of post- medieval date, although it may have been re-cut from an Early Christian fragment. The plain rectangular top-slab, 2.13m by 0.77m, bears the name INVERL(?IEVER).

Early 16th century.

(85) Lapidarium, above door Side-slab of tomb-chest, 2.08m long by 0.61m high including a 0.22m plain base which is 100mm thick. The left edge is flaked, probably when the slab was being quarried or carved since the damaged area bears shallow foliage-ornament. This belongs to a series of arched stems as on number 84, but having smaller leaves and with additional foliage at the right end. The lower right corner is roughly rebated, possibly to fit over a step. The identity of length suggests that this may have been part of number 84. Since the rebate shows that this slab was intended to be viewed from the south, this implies that the south side-slab of number 84 has been moved.

Early 16th century.

(86) Churchyard. Reconstructed tomb-chest. The much- worn side-slab measures 2.22m long by 70mm thick and bears arched foliated stems as on numbers 84 and 85. The W end-slab, 0.71m long by 90mm thick, and damaged at the top right, bears four cusped niches with moulded bases and capitals, grouped in two pairs under ogival arch-heads with pinnacles, foliated finials, and quatrefoils in the upper spandrels. The plain top slab is inscribed DUNTROON. (Drummond, Monuments, pl.zlS,l; end-slab only). This may be the slab on which Herbert Campbell in 1894 recorded the Duntrune Crest of two arms drawing a bow.

Early 16th century.

3.3.2.5 Crosses

(87) Church, formerly in churchyard. Head and upper part of small free-standing cross, lacking the top arm. It is 0.61m in surviving height by 0.45m across the arms, the tapered shaft is 0.27m wide below the cross-head, and the thickness is 80mm. The angles of the shaft bear roll-mouldings separated by nailhead-ornament on the edges, which are continued by triple-beaded concave brackets having discs at both ends and supporting the cross-arms. Within these mouldings there is a plain cross with square armpits, outlined on both faces by a continuous incised margin; the surviving lower armpits are sunk, within the brackets, but the piercing of the left one appears to be accidental. On one face there is the figure of the Crucified Saviour, complete except for part of the head but much worn, with straight arms slightly raised and head inclined to His right. The posture of the figure resembles that on the cross formerly at Kilmichael Glassary, and traces of one upper bracket indicate that the cross-head was a simpler version of the one at Kilfinan.

Loch Awe school, 14th-15th century.

(88) Churchyard. Cross-shaft fragment, 1.34m long, tapering from 0.28m to 0.21m in width and from 105mm to 75mm in thickness. On both faces there is a simple pecked 50mm margin, terminating 0.2m above the broken foot, and at one edge there is the fragmentary projection of the cross-head. It has been inverted and re-used as a gravemarker with the added name POLTALLOCH.

Local, 14th-early 16th century.

(89) Church, reconstructed in 1977. Free-standing ringed cross whose shaft, with incomplete head, was recorded lying in the churchyard about 1860, and subsequently set in a plain socket-stone near the entrance-gate, along with the detached left arm. The top arm was recovered in 1973 from a culvert some 400m from the church, and has been attached to the cross-head, while the left arm has been fixed in position by metal rods. The cross is 2.07m in visible height, a further 0.25m of the broken foot being concealed in a modern concrete base; it tapers in width from 0.45m to 0.35m and in thickness from 160mm to 130mm, and the original span was about 1.3m. The pierced arm-pits were probably semicircular and the broken junctions of the ring-quadrants are visible on the edges of the shaft and top arm, while a fragment about 95mm thick is preserved on the under-side of the left arm. The ring appears to have continued the treatment of the angles of the cross, which are wrought on the front with a hollow chamfer enclosing a roll-moulding, and on the back with plain 45mm chamfers, and a roll-moulding in the cross-head only. The upper edge of the top arm has an additional thick roll at the front, and slopes down with a rough 65mm bevel to the back, while the arms are not evenly drafted from front to back and parts of the ornament appear to be unfinished. On the front (a) the cross-head and upper part of the shaft contain the figure of the Crucified Saviour, 0.84m high, against a plain background and with no indication of the rood. The upper part of the figure is enclosed in a cable moulded ring, which meets the torso in line with the upper edge of the short loin-cloth. The head, which is tilted to His right, is fully modelled and the background has been hollowed out to emphasise this, while the torso is also well defined, but the crossed legs are less strongly indicated and the right hand is only roughly shaped. In the left arm there is a winged quadruped with head turned back to face the Saviour, carrying a book and probably representing the lion symbol of the evangelist Mark, while in the top arm there is an angel with one arm extended, probably symbolising St Matthew. At the base of the shaft, now partly concealed, there are two thick undulating plant-stems enclosing a quatrefoil, and above them a further winged and horned beast with head turned upwards, probably the bull of St. Luke. The back bears in the cross-head the seated and draped figure of Christ in majesty, with arms raised to display His wounds, within an oval mandorla which meets the base of the hollowed-out halo. The top arm of the cross contains an angel similar to that on the front, but the shaft is plain and the side-arm is also plain within the edge-roll. Despite its incomplete character this cross shows an ambitious treatment of the human figure, perhaps based on metalwork models, and a simple but coherent iconographic scheme not matched elsewhere in the West Highlands, and it may be attributed to the first half of the 16th century.

3.3.2.6 Post-Reformation

The following monuments are in the churchyard, except where specified.

(90) Tapered slab, 1.86m by 0.55m, bordered by a broad roll-moulding within a rebated margin. At each end there is incised an equal-armed outline cross with ridged surface-ornament, encircled by a triple-beaded ring. These roundels are linked by two sinuous lines forming three 'medallions', with an outline cross in the centre one. Along one edge there is the added name ELANRIE. This appears to be a late imitation, probably of late 16th- or 17th-century date, of the plant-stems shown on late medieval grave slabs.

(91) Poltalloch enclosure. Large rectangular slab, evidently from a table-tomb, with an edge-roll which does not return at the foot, and mouldings below the edge. In the lower half there is a large relief armorial with elaborately foliated mantling, the shield charged: on a saltire, between four stags' heads &couped, five mullets (These appear to be couped, rather than erased as in the 1818 metricalion of the arms of Malcolm of Poltalloch). Above the helm there is a thin tower for crest, with the motto AD ARDVA TENDIT ('He strives for the heights') and the lower part of the shield isflanked by skulls and angels' heads, with an hourglass and a heart, and at the foot an open book and an oval boss with the initials M/AM IM. At the top there is inscribed in incised capitals:

QUICQUID MR ARCHIBALDUS MALCOL/UMBUS CELLAE
 MICHAELIS PASTOR MORTI / OBNOXIUM HABUIT SUB
 HOC SAXO JACIT / OBIT AN(NO) DOM(INI) 1685
 AETATIS SUAE 80
 NUMEROSUS INOPES CELUM DUXIT STABILI /
 FIRMO ALTO PICTORE VOCE FIDE /
 VITAM OBITUS COELUM FUSIT / CELEBRAT RESERAVIT /
 GRATIA VITA OBITUS FIRMA BEATA / SILENS

'The mortal remains of Mr Archibald Malcolm, minister of Kilmichael, lie beneath this stone. He died in 1685 aged 80. Many were the poor he led to Heaven, with steadfast heart, with steady voice and profound faith. He poured forth his life, made glorious death, and unlocked the gates of Paradise. He displayed unwavering grace, enjoyed a blessed life and met a peaceful end':

Archibald Malcolm or MacCallum of Poltalloch was minister of Glassary parish from 1639 until his death. The initial IM are presumably those of his second wife, Janet MacLachlan. This monument is probably the source of the statement that he was buried at Kilmartin.

(92-3) Recumbent slab (92) inscribed 1685 / D McBEN. An adjacent slab (93) bears the same initials, and a headstone of 1841 commemorates members of the MacVean family.

(94) Mural monument, about 4m wide and up to 3m high, built into E wall of churchyard. It comprises rubble walling incorporating schist panels and framed by schist pilasters of rectangular section, with moulded bases, mid-mouldings and cornice, broken at the centre by a tall projection with later sandstone jambs and a schist cornice. This contains an armorial panel of schist with a shield set on stylised mantling and framed by clusters of &fruit with a central face-mask having simplified wings. The shield is parted per pale: dexter, quarterly; 1st, a lion rampant; 2nd, a dexter hand couped holding a cross with expanded upper terminal; 3rd, a galley, pennon flying; 4th, a salmon naiant; sinister, a lion rampant within an engrailed border. On a separate panel below, in thin incised letters, is the inscription:

QUICQUID MORTALE HABENT MR GULIELMUS /
 M(AC)LAUHLANE CELLAE MARTINENSIS RECTOR /
 AC GRISELLA McGILCHRIST EIUS UXOR EORUM/QUE
 LIBERI UTPOTE MORTIS EXUVIAE IN HOC DIVERSORIO
 LATERE OPTAT / 1686

'Mr William MacLachlan, rector of Kilmartin, desires that his mortal remains, and those of his wife Grisel MacGilchrist and their children, should lie in this resting- place as spoils of Death, 1686'.

Below there are three detached relief panels bearing emblems of mortality. William MacLachlan became minister of Kilmartin in 1669, and died in Ireland in or after 1690, having been deprived of his charge for not conforming to Presbyterianism.

(95) Churchyard, in railed Campbell of Kilmartin enclosure. Table-tomb, with central part of head curved. At the top there is a winged angel's head in high relief, then emblems of mortality including a coffin and crossed spade and shovel, under a horseshoe label with tasselled ends. A shield, within serpentine mantling, bears quarterly, for Campbell: 1st and 4th, gyronny of eight; 2nd and 3rd, a galley, &a salmon naiant in base. At the foot there is the incised date 1686. There is no visible inscription and the tomb may have been erected during the lifetime of Alexander Campbell, first laird of the second Campbell family of Kilmartin (see No.134), whose date of death is unknown. The monument may be attributed to the same carver as the MacLachlan slab of 1685 at Kilbrandon (Lorn).

(96) Tapered slab bearing the date 1704 and, the initials D McR and M McM, within the following marginal inscription:

HERE LYES / THE CORPS OF DANIEL McRIVER [] WHO DIED / THE 9 DAY OF AGUST [] THE 57 YEAR OF HIS AGE

The name MacRiver or Mac inRiver is recorded in various forms in Kilmartin and Craignish parishes in the late 17th century.

(97) Tapered slab, adjoining number 96, with the incised date 1704 and initials D McR and emblems of mortality in low relief, within a damaged marginal inscription:

HERE LYES THE / CORPS OF DUNCAN McPIVER (sic) SON TO DAN[.../. J

(98) Lapidarium 22. Tapered slab, 0.92m by 0.63m In the upper part is the incised inscription AC / KMcC/ 1707, with the added inscription ELANRIE along the top edge, and then a sunk panel containing, in bold false relief, chevron- ornament at the sides and a large encircled hexafoil above a short pedestal. In the lower half there is a central false-relief saltire flanked by pellets and lozenges, and then a shield, quarterly: 1st and 4th, gyronny of eight; 2nd, a galley, a salmon naiant in base; 3rd, checky, flanked by the initials NC and MC. This slab probably commemorates Angus Campbell of Eilean Righ (a cadet branch of Duntrune), who is recorded in 1701, and the lower initials maybe those of his younger son Neil. Despite its primitive character, the ornament of this slab is clearly contemporary with the initials.

(99) Lapidarium 21. Tapered slab with bevelled edges, 1.95m by 0.59m. In the same bold style as number 98 it bears motifs of varying size, including four hexafoils; two sets of concentric rings, one enclosing a crosslet; two other small crosslets, and a sunk lozenge. At the top, below the added ELANRIE, there is incised DC / 1712, for Donald Campbell of Eilean Righ, elder son of Angus Campbell (supra).

(100) Table-tomb of early 18th century type with illegible inscription in the upper part, and below it a relief armorial bearing a shield, quarterly: 1st, a stag's head cabossed; 2nd, gyronny of eight; 3rd, a galley; 4th, on a fess three buckles. These arms were used by the Campbells of Cawdor and the crest is a bird, probably the Cawdor swan. Below a straight label there are emblems of mortality.

(101) Table-tomb with added inscription KILMERTIN, carved in relief with an elaborate shield bearing an inescutcheon gyronny of eight between four salmon naiant, an illegible charge in base. The crest is a stag's head coupé. This slab and numbers 102-4 evidently commemorate 18th-century members of the second Campbell family of Kilmartin, cadets of Inverawe.

(102) Table-tomb, much worn, bearing a shield within mantling: an inescutcheon gyronny of eight between six salmon naiant. In the lower part there are large emblems of mortality below a curved label.

(103-4) Two almost identical table-tombs, resembling number 102 but with more florid mantling and each having a stag's head for crest.

(105) Table-tomb, similar to numbers 102-4 but with mantling spiralling more freely, and bearing a shield quarterly: 1st and 4th, gyronny of eight; 2nd, a boar's head coupé; 3rd, a galley, oars in action. These arms suggest a connection with the Campbells of Lochnell, but there is no legible inscription.

(106) Table-tomb, with the date 1736 and an almost illegible inscription, recorded as commemorating 'Duncan Campbell of the family of Duntroon and Katherine Campbell his spouse'. At the centre is the added inscription IAIN CAIMBEUL, and then emblems of mortality as on numbers 102-5.

(107) Churchyard, in railed Campbell of Ormaig enclosure. Large slab bearing at the top a raised blank panel, and then a Latin inscription commemorating Archibald Campbell of Ormaig, 'gentleman' (armiger), who died in 1743 aged 75, and his descendants.

(108) Churchyard, adjoining number 107. Headstone with shaped head, bearing inscription commemorating Isabella Campbell, wife of Archibald Lambie, formerly minister of Kilmartin.

The date of death is given as 1764, but is recorded elsewhere as 1752, and it is possible that this headstone, like an adjacent one of similar style, was erected shortly before 1816. Archibald Lambie was minister of Kilmartin from 1738 until his death in 1767, and his first wife was a daughter of Archibald Campbell of Ormaig.

(109) Mural monument in church, erected in 1819 by his sons to commemorate Neil Campbell of Duntroon and Oib (1736-91), who 'served as Captain at the taking of the Havnnnah in 1762, and afterwards in ... the American War', and in 1786 went to the East Indies, 'hoping by this honourable exertion to retrieve his paternal inheritance from debt incurred by the failure of the Ayr Bank, and by liberal pecuniary engagements for others'. He died at Madras as 'High Sheriff. . . and aide de camp to the Nabob of Arcot'. His eldest son James (1773-99) was killed in action with the 79th Regiment in Holland, after military service in India and South Africa. The marble tablet is surmounted by a segmental pediment with the family crest, two arms drawing a bow, and the motto AGITE PRO VIRIBUS ('Do your best'), between two flaming urns.

(110) Large table tomb erected, probably about 1800, by John Smith, tacksman of Stroneskar, to his son Alexander, doctor of medicine, who died aged 36. In the upper part is a dolphin crest on a wreath, then an elaborate angel holding a chalice, and bluebell swags flanking a label with the motto MEDIIS TRANQUILLUS IN UNDIS ('calm in the midst of the waves'). An adjacent slab commemorates Janet Campbell, wife of John Smith, who died in 1816 aged 75.

(111-12) Headstone with shaped bead (111) erected in 1809 by Donald McNicoII to his wife Elizabeth McFarlane and their children Archibald and Helen, with the verse:

IT IS GOD THAT LIFTS OUR COMFORTS / HIGH
OR SINKS THEM IN THE GRAVE /
HE GIVES AND THEN HE TAKES AWAY /
HE TAKES BUT WHAT HE GAVE

The adjacent table-tomb (112) commemorates Elizabeth McFarlane, wife of Donald McNicoll 'of the Excise', who died in 1807 aged 26.

(113) Churchyard, in the stone-built W reredos-wall of the iron-railed Campbell of Kilmartin burial-enclosure, which has sandstone quoins and base-course, and a gabled pediment with ball-finial. Mural tablet of white marble, erected in 1827 by his widow, Mrs Helen Lamont Campbell, to Dugald Campbell of Kilmartin who died in 1825 aged 46.

(114-16) Group of monuments to the family of James Gow, the farm manager who was brought from Perthshire about 1796 to supervise agricultural improvement on the Poltalloch estate. A headstone (114) with curved pediment and a crest and motto as on number 110 was erected by 'James Gow at Experiment' (Barsloisnach, No.214) to his wife, Catherine Romance, who died in 1828 aged 60. An obelisk 3.5m high (115) was erected in 1840 to their son, James Gow, junior, who died in 1837 aged 33, by 'the work people on the estate of Poltalloch who were usually employed under his charge'. It was carved by a young Glasgow sculptor named Mossman and the shaft bears a medallion with a blasted tree and a broken column. A table-tomb (116) commemorates James Gow himself, who died at 'Rudale' (Rhudil) in 1855 aged 88.

(117-118) Mural monuments in church commemorating the sons of Neil Campbell of Duntroon and Oib and resembling that of their father (number 109). That of Major-General Sir Neil Campbell, C.B., governor of Sierra Leone, who 'fell a sacrifice to the baneful climate of Africa' in 1827 aged 51 years, bears a second crest, a lion rampant with the motto FERE CHAMPENOISE, the name of a battle of 1814 which, with others including Waterloo, is listed at the foot of the tablet. It was erected in 1835 by his brother, later General Patrick Campbell (1779-1857), whose military service with British and Spanish forces, and subsequent diplomatic career, are recorded on his own tablet (118).

(119) Mural marble tablet in church, in form of a sarcophagus gable with fluted angles, anthemion finials, and a gabled pediment bearing a rose-spray in relief. It commemorates Reginald Neill (1833-5) and Isabella Lucy (1834-5), children of Neill Malcolm the younger of Poltalloch.

(120) Monument similar to number 119 but with clawed feet, commemorating Neill Malcolm of Poltalloch (1769-1837), who was buried at Bexley (Kent) alongside his wife Mary Ann Orme. It was erected 'as a tribute to his unremitting exertions to advance the welfare and improvement of the land of his fathers', and the pediment contains an armorial achievement supported by two stags bearing the Malcolm arms, as on number 91, with a central inescutcheon charged for Orme, and below the shield the additional motto DEUS REFUGIUM NOSTRUM ('God is our refuge').

(121) Table-tomb erected by Margaret Cummings to her husband John Buchannan, 'lately Piper Major in the 42nd Royal Highlanders', who died at Lochgilphead in 1845 aged 75. John Buchannan was noted as an 'excellent piper' who won the Highland Society's competition before serving with his regiment in the Peninsular war from 1803-31
